

Question: What should a government body do when a records request is received?

Editor's Note: This is a monthly column prepared by the Iowa Public Information Board to update Iowans on the IPIB's activities and provide information on some of the issues routinely addressed by the board.

ANSWER: The Iowa Code provides only basic direction for responding to a records request. Requests should be fulfilled in a timely manner unless an injunction is being sought pursuant to Iowa Code section 22.8.

Best practices suggest that the record custodian should acknowledge receipt of the request as soon as possible, preferably the same day. If the government body has a policy concerning record requests, such as a fee schedule, that information should be provided with the acknowledgment.

Sometimes the record release may be unavoidably delayed, such as difficulty in finding the records or a legal review. If the records release may be delayed, the reasons for any delay and the anticipated date for release should be communicated.

A government body should have a procedure in place to avoid delays due to vacation schedules, medical situations, and holidays. This may require designating an assistant custodian who can respond to requests when the legal custodian is absent.
